Neighborhood disorder and disadvantage have been shown in many locations to be associated with poor health behavior. People living in disadvantaged neighborhoods are more likely to demonstrate heavy alcohol use. Alcohol outlets tend to be more densely located in disordered neighborhoods. Young adults have higher rates of binge drinking than any other age group. There is little research investigating the relationship between neighborhood disorder and alcohol use among young adults.

Methods

Hypotheses

Results

Discussion

Acknowledgements: